

Results of your stool sample for bowel cancer screening: No blood was found in the stool.

We have analysed your stool sample. It showed that you have no blood in your stool. This means that we have found no signs of cancer or precursors to bowel cancer.

However, like everyone else, you should continue to be aware of any signs of bowel cancer. If you detect any blood or mucus from the rectum, or if your bowel habits change over time, it is important that you contact your doctor, even if you have just been examined.

In approximately two years, you will again be contacted to submit a new screening, unless you have already turned 75 years of age and are therefore no longer covered by the screening examination.
